THE BIRD IN THE LINDEN. A little bird sang on a Linden-tree,
In the baimy days of spring;
When his lay of love woke a voice in me,
And I sessayed to sing.
The song of the hird was merry and gled,
As aong of a hird might be;
My naswering strain was mournful and sad,
As I sat 'neath that Linden-tree.

For close by the bird on the Lindan-tree
Perched a mate with folded wing;
But never a mate was there for me;
To listen while I might sing.
My spring was past and my life was lone,
Love never had beamed on me;
I could not echo the loyous some
Of that bird on the Linden-tree.

The little bird sang on the Lindsn-tree.
When summer was warm and bright.
And oh! I could answer his minatrensy
With a song of deep delight.
For the heart! I had long despaired to gain
Had blossomed with love for me; Oh, joy! we were one who had once been twally. And we sat 'neath that Lindon-tree.

HOW THE FLORIDA REYS WERE FORMED.

BY MRS, E. C. AGARGE. Just outside the lower extremity of Florida are a number of islands,—the easternment almost touching the main land, while the western its a little farther off.

In consequence of the farther off.

In consequence of this peculiarity in their disposition, the space left between these islands and the Florida coast marked on the map as mud flats, is broad and open at the western outlet.

broad and open at the western outlet, but almost close fowards the east. It is impediant to remember the form of this broadintervening space, stretching between the keys and the main-land, because the narrower and more shallowend may easily be filed with sand, mud, dn. If you will look at the flats at the eastern end of this once open channel that such a process is actually going on. In fact, a current sets towards the channel, drifting into it sand, and eabys of all sorts.

I hope to show you that these flats, being gradually consolidated into dry land, will at lest make a bridge between the islands und lower extremity of Fiorida, uniting solidly together, so that the former will cease to be balands and will become part of the mainland. Indeed, we shall find that Fiorida herself, so far as her structure is known. herself, so far as her structure is known is inly's succession of such rown of islands as now lie cutside her sombern shore, united togother, by flats exactly like those accumulating at this moment between the present islands and the coast. These islands are called the Keys of Florida, and are distinguished from one another by a variety of appellations, such as Sand Key, Key West, Indian Rey, Long Key, and the like. They are of various sizes; some—like Key Wost, for instance—are large inhabited islands, planted with fruit and flower gardens, where occommats inhabited islands, planted with fruit and flower gardens, where eccesamis and other paims, erange-trees, and bananas, grow in great inxurinnee, while others are more barren rocks scarcely rising above the surface of the ocean washed over by waves, and destitue of vardure.

Suppose now that in fanny we sail out from the keys on their meaward side, choosing a bright, calm day when the surface of the ocean is atill. The waters of that region are remarkably clear; and undersuch influences of thy and atmosphere they are so transparent that the bottom may be seen at a considerable depth, distinct as a picture considerable depth, distinct as a picture under glass.

Sailing southward to a distance of some four or five miles from the keys, we find ourselves in a neighborhod of a rocky wall rising from the ocean hottom. As we approach it, if we look over the side of the boat, we shall see that we are passing over a floating shrubbery, a branching growth spreading is every direction, its lighter portions awaying gently with the movement of the sea. It is not green like lead shrubbery, but has a variety of of soft, bright hues, -purple, row, amethyst, yollow, brown, and essage. It directmentances are favorable, and the water crystal-clear, as it sometimes is, we shall have glimpess of bright-nolorconsiderable depth, distinct as a picture we shall have glimpess of bright-colored fishes swintming in and our amid this tangled thicket, or here and there we may discern a variety of sea-anemones, their noft feathery fringes fully expanded.

This wonderful browth over which This wonderful growth over which Wherever vircumstances are most favorable to their development, there they grow most rapidly. In such apons they grow the wall to the sea level sconer than in others.

This done however, the work of the

This done however, the work of the coral animals ceases, because they cannot live out of the water. But in consequence of a process of deany and decomposition, which I shall describe when we examine the structure and life of the animals themselves, such a wall—or coral reef, as it is called—in surrounded by coral sand and fragments wern away from it by the action of the sea.

Materials of this sort, mixed with sea, weed, broken shalls, do soon contents. weed, broken shells, &c., soon gather upon the top of the reef wherever the coral growth has brought it to the sea level. By degrees a soil is collected upon such spois, raising them more and more above the surface of the water. In this way the islands have been formed which we call the Keys of Florids; and in the same way the little patches now rising highest on the summit of the Reef will enlarge gradually into more extensive Islands, though at present many of them are scarcely visible above the water level.—Our Young Folks.

RIGHTS OF OLD MATOR

The dew and the flewers for the May; the greenness, the grateful shadow, the growth and riponing for the summer; the corn, and the grapes, and the gold of falling leaves, and the strens sweetness for the autumn; good meh's feast and the old falls by the flewide and and the old folks by the fireside, and the love story and poem—all these, and a thousand quiet pleasures beside, are shut up for us within the white gates of the winter. If we but reep the apring in our hearts, and a fender and truthful acquiesesnos in the divine ordering of things, we can create the spring in any piace, in any acason. I have seen men and women who had never in their lives so fine an adornment as their white hairs; and I doubt not but that they may become so to all of menos white hairs; and I doubt not but that they may become so to all of us, provided we but live as we ought to live, in marriage or out of it, and whether we be rich or poorer. Just stop for a moment then, my trightened bird, fluttering your faded plurage so wildly on the border of the stream; the water affords but treacherous footing at best; and ramember, too, that many a poor thing had to stay under till she died! In the first place, what is all the fright and the flutter about? Your coat is growing brown, to be sure; your top-knot droops and your aong is a little thinner and feebler than it used to be; but nature, in spite of you, will go on with ber inexorable processes; and twenty matee, if you could take them, would not thing nack the scarlet brightness to the wing, nor the rich, golden finlesses the wing, for the rich, golden falmess to the quavering note—not at all. Then you were born for the tree-top and the meadow, and taking into account the possibility of coming up bedraggled and amothered, is the old faded cost and the drawner top-kept worth the and the drooping top-knot worth the

and the drooping top-knot worth the price?

But, to drop une simile, let me say more directly the iton the ladies are so much greated of is no iton after all, but only "Snug, the Jeiner." Possess your souls, then, in patience a little while, and he will "roar you gently an a nucking dove." The alarm is winely false; it is the ignorance and the wrong education that have conjured un the light it is the ignorance and the wrong education that have conjured up the flon that scares you. Meet him honestly and squarely, and he will resolve himself into thin air and vanish away.

There is much talk now-a-days about woman's rights; but I mention it here only to say that, if women would, first of all, assert their Inalienable right to grow old, in marriage of ont, as they may choose, they would thereby no farpush out the walls of the world's superstition as to come penceshiy into possession of much ground likely, as matters stand, to be held a long while debatable.—Airce Carr, in Puckurd's Monthly, for May.

The Illinois Legislature has passed a oxen and other animals is punished by a fine of $30 to $100; and stock dealers and railroad companies are alike held liable under pensities of $100 for transporting animals in an inhuman manner. The law says that nosheep, awins or cattle shall be confined in a car for more than twenty-sight hours, unless in case of detention by a storm, wishout unloading for rest, water and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours. Cook fighting and bullsecutive hours. Cock sighting and bull-dog and bear baiting are also punish-ed by a fine of $60 to $100.
